Copyright Compliance

Your honors thesis is a public dissemination of your research or creative work and as such will be made available to the scholarly community through the NC-Docks online repository. By submitting this form you agree to have a copy of this work placed in the repository—a non-commercial, open-access archive of institutional scholarly work—and you affirm that the content of your submission does not, to the best of your knowledge, infringe upon anyone’s copyright through plagiarism, unapproved reproduction of materials or improper citation.

I understand and agree: _____ Yes _____ No

Release of the Materials

As a public dissemination of your work, your honors thesis will be made available online through the Belk Library one semester (approximately 3 months) after graduation. Persons may find your published work by searching online library databases such as WorldCat.org for you, your thesis director, the general area, or the key words you provide. You may request that we hold your manuscript from public dissemination for up to one additional semester in one of the situations below. Both your thesis director and the Director of the Honors College must approve your request for a delay in posting.

- _____ I have begun the process to seek a patent
- _____ I am actively in copyright/publisher negotiations (other than a standard journal submission)
- _____ Other (please explain below)

Please sign and date below to verify that you have read and understood the copyright compliance and the release of materials:
